Information About Chinese Medicine & Acupuncture

Please carefully read each section below, ask any questions, and initial each section to indicate your understanding of the information:

_____ Acupuncture is a healing art that involves the stimulation of specific points on the body. It has the intended effect of normalizing body functions, modifying the perception of pain, and treating certain diseases or dysfunctions of the body. The stimulation may be produced by needles, heat, digital pressure, electric currents, or other means, but most frequently by needling. Location and depth of needle insertion is determined by the nature of the problem. Acupuncture is considered a safe method of treatment, but occasionally there may be some bruising or tingling near the needling sites that lasts a few days.

_____ Insertion of acupuncture needles may be accompanied by a brief painful sensation, and there is a slight possibility of minor swelling, bleeding, discoloration of the skin, hematoma (bruise) at the site of needling, or fainting. Momentary euphoria or lightheadedness may occur after treatment. Some very rare risks of acupuncture include fainting, spontaneous abortion, pneumothorax (a partially or fully-collapsed lung due to air in the chest cavity), and infection.

_____ Contraindications (symptoms or conditions that make a particular treatment inadvisable) for acupuncture treatment and certain herbs may include a history of bleeding disorder or current anticoagulation therapy, an implanted pacemaker or prosthetic heart valve, use of certain medications, and/or pregnancy. It is important that you notify your practitioner if any of these apply to you.

_____ Moxibustion is heat supplied, either directly or indirectly, by burning the herb Folium Artemisiae Vulgaris over a single acupuncture point or group of points. The area being treated may remain red and warm for several hours after treatment. In rare instances, a minor burn may occur at the site of moxibustion.

_____ Cupping is the application of round vacuum cups over a large muscular area, such as the back, to enhance blood circulation to the designated area. Cupping may produce a deep redness, discoloration, and on rare occasions, a minor blister which may persist for up to a week. These marks are not indications of complications or injury.

Acupressure/Tui Na Massage is used to modify or prevent the perception of pain and to normalize the body's physiologic functions. Possible side effects of this treatment include, but are not limited to, bruising, muscle soreness, and the possible aggravation of symptoms existing prior to treatment.

Herbs and/or Nutritional Supplements from the Oriental Materia Medica may be recommended to me to treat bodily dysfunction, to modify or prevent pain perception, and/or to normalize the body's physiologic functions. Herbs are used to facilitate the body's own restorative process. The herbs are typically taken in tea form or mixing powdered granules.

Herbs are considered safe in the practice of TCM, although some substances may be toxic in large doses. Some dietary supplements are inappropriate during pregnancy, may interact with medications or other supplements, may have side effects of their own, or may contain potentially harmful ingredients not listed on the label. Most supplements have not been tested in pregnant women, nursing mothers, or children. Potential risks include but are not limited to: allergic reactions, nausea, gas, stomachache, vomiting, headache, diarrhea, rash, hives, and tingling of the tongue. Some possible side effects of applying topical creams, liniments, ointments and plasters are rashes, hives and tingling of the skin.

Gua sha means "scraping sha-bruises" and involves using a scraping tool intended to result in minor skin bruising. Some patients experience temporary indentation of their skin after gua sha treatment, and in some instances minor bleeding can occur. If any bleeding occurs, there is an associated risk of infection.

Infrared and TDP (Teding Diancibo Pu) lamp therapy consists of warming the skin with a heat source mounted to an adjustable arm and positioned above the body. If the heat source comes into close proximity with or contacts the skin, there is the risk of a burn.
